Indigeneity

First Nations' culture, community and lore are at the forefront of everything we do, our ethos is centred around First Nations' knowledge, science and technology in the application of taking care of country for future generations.

First Nations-led

We listen and engage with communities and Traditional Owners and support self-determined community development initiatives.

People-Centred

By putting people and culture first we create a unique way of working with and alongside First Nations to improve the social and emotional wellbeing for all First Nations people.

First Nations Justice & Equity

We develop new systems that benefit communities and address climate change and challenge unjust structures that oppress the Global South and First Nations people.

Collaboration

We join forces with like-minded Indigenous organisations and communities, carbon companies, NGOs, conservation groups, universities, industry and governments acknowledging that together we can achieve greater impact.

Integrity & Accountability

We are a lean organisation and are responsive to the needs of communities and traditional owners and act honestly, ethically and are accountable for our actions.

Our Approach

Indigenous people safeguard 80% of the world's remaining biodiversity. Therefore, the best way to improve the health of land, rivers and seas and the lives of First Nations peoples globally, is to put the power back into Indigenous hands. We do this through a strengths-based, community driven cultural framework, that supports First Nations experts in land, lore and caring for Country to develop their own biodiversity and climate solutions that demonstrate environmental, social, economic and cultural core benefits. Our ethos is grounded in First Nations' knowledge, science and technology to take care of Country for future generations.
